Where I am today

I have made several different choices in my life, which have not turned out the way that I have hoped.

I have changed my major several times, and they have not panned out to be the best decisions until now. This is my fifth year of college and I finally feel that I am doing something that I have a passion for.

As a Sport and Recreation Major, I wanted to do something additional to get my foot in the door in this industry. I applied and searched for additional internships.

I was hired at the Wachovia Center as an off ice intern, and I have loved every moment since I was hired in December.

I was recently promoted from my position as office intern to office supervisor. I think that I could be a great asset to this industry, and can really excel in the right company.

I feel like I am starting to do something I love, and I look forward to Montague and Associates to put me in the best position possible to cement a permanent position with the right company for me.

Education

I have traveled a long journey to where I am in my life today. I graduated from William Tennent High School in 2005, and began my college education at Indiana University of Pennsylvania in the fall of 2005.

I started my college career as an elementary education major at IUP. I quickly started to discover that teaching younger children really just was not for me.

While I was a sophomore out in Indiana, PA, I changed my major to the college of business and became an Accounting major. I later discovered that, that was not for me either, and changed my major to Mathematics Secondary Education.

When I began Temple University I was a Mathematics Education major, who attended the Ambler Campus, and was simply just a commuter.

It wasn't until summer 2008, that I transferred, and changed my major to Sport and Recreation Management Major.
